White and hygienic

Stainless steel levelling feet have been designed for more demanding requirements. Ganter now offers the GN 341.2 standard elements also with white rubber underlay.

The regulations for professional applications such as food processing or food production are particularly stringent and also cover details such as hinges, handles or levelling feet. For these highly specialised and sensitive scenarios, Ganter also has a wide range of suitable standard elements. Easy cleaning, smooth surfaces, large radiuses without gaps or joints characterise this product category, among it the GN 341.1 stainless steel hygiene levelling foot.

These positioning elements not only guarantee a safe and sturdy stand, they also allow the units they carry to be adjusted by as much as 40 mm – with an adjustment sleeve concealing the thread and so preventing problematic deposits in the thread. In general, the design avoids sharp edges or small radiuses – which makes cleaning a great deal more convenient. Stainless steel with its smooth surface also makes disinfection easier and prevents germs from collecting.

The rounded base plate of the levelling foot features a rubber underlay which absorbs shock and prevents undesirable deposits from collecting between the base of the levelling foot and the positioning surface. The robust rubber layer is firmly vulcanized and seamlessly connects with the solid sheet metal plate. This rubber underlay is normally black, but Ganter now offers the levelling foot in a white design variant GN 341.2 – with discoloration and undesirable markings caused by the levelling foot now a thing of the past. And, thanks to the white rubber underlay, dirt and desposits are now identified much easier. After all, white still signals cleanliness and purity.
